FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE—

Wright Development Center

BY MAJ. GEN. FRED. R. DENT, JR., USAF
Commanding General, Wright Air
Development Center

THE mission of the Wright Air Development Center, as part of the Air Research and Development Command, is to assist in developing the best possible materiel, equipment, weapons, systems and techniques for the United States Air Force, enabling the Air Force to accomplish its assigned role in national defense more effectively and economically.

Maj. Gen. Dent

To that end, WADC is charged specifically with the development of Air Force aircraft and guided missiles, together with associated flight, ground, and personal equipment. It is located at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, and is one of seven Centers operating throughout the nation under the Air Research and Development Command. This newest of Air Force major commands was established on 1 April 1951 and has its headquarters in Baltimore, Md.

WADC's physical plant is enormous. The wind tunnels, whirl rigs, rotor stands, laboratories, engineering apparatus, buildings, and other real properties had an estimated monetary value in excess of $200,000,000 several years ago. Today's value, taking into consideration facilities added since that time, normal depreciation, and the higher prevailing prices, would be perhaps twice that figure.

Maintained at the Center, to aid in determining basic design data for aircraft and missiles, are extensive aircraft structure testing facilities and subsonic and supersonic wind tunnels from 2 to 20 feet. Whirl test stands up to 10,000 hp capacity, and rotor test stands up to 1,000 hp capacity are used in propeller and rotor research and testing. Numerous test chambers are located in the major laboratories for testing all types of Air Force materiel under simulated extreme climatic and altitude conditions; and specialized test equipment such as spin

*The Air Force announced recently that General Dent will replace Maj. Gen. Leon W. Johnson as Commanding General of the Third Air Force in England. General Dent will leave his present post on 15 Feb. General Johnson returns to the United States to replace Maj. Gen. Willis H. Hale as CG of the Continental Air Command. General Hale is ill and has been hospitalized.

Sec'y. Lovett Warns Against Budget Cuts

Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett went to Capitol Hill this week to urge approval of the $52.1 billion military budget for fiscal year 1953, reduced from the $71 billion which the Armed Forces held necessary to meet "early readiness dates," and from the $55 billion which the Department of Defense asked of the White House in its finished budget.

"All of the calculated risks, considered prudent, have been accepted," said Secretary Lovett.

"With a lesser amount of money," he told a Senate Appropriations subcommittee, "we would be limiting our efforts to a program level that would increase, beyond the realms of prudence, the calculated risks already taken."

Secretary Lovett described how the Armed Forces, instead of attempting to reach preparedness goals in Fiscal Year 1953 or 1954, will progress "towards" these objectives at a reduced pace.

In this regard, he repeatedly described the modified program as a "stretch-out," a word that is likely to be heard as frequently in the future as the "fat-into-muscle" phrase of the pre-Korea defense economy campaign.

The $52.1 billion will permit the Army to expand toward 21 full-strength divisions (actually, only 20 will be on active duty); the Navy toward 408 combat vessels with 16 carrier air groups; the Air Force toward 143 wings; and the Marine Corps toward a goal of three full divisions and three air wings.

"The decision to build toward these goals rather than attempt to reach them in Fiscal Year 1953 or 1954," explained Secretary Lovett, "was made after careful consideration of the economic, material, fiscal and military implications involved."

He said it is necessary "to complete a military program within the framework of the partial mobilization concept while at the same time maintaining a strong civilian economy. It has never before been attempted in this country. We have always operated military production on the feast or famine basis of large production during actual war and little or no military production at other times," he continued. "The building of a military organization capable of deterring aggression without destroying our economy is an extremely complicated problem."

Immediately after the public testimony of Secretary Lovett and Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force, closed hearings were launched by both Senate and House Appropriations subcommittees on the 1953 budget.

Last year, such hearings were not started until the Spring, but in an election year Congress will wind up business as quickly as possible.

Despite the fact that economy is all-

Marine Corps Outlines 1952 Promotion Plans

The first of three Marine Corps selection boards to name enlisted men for appointment to commissioned rank has completed its work, naming 473 warrant officers and master sergeants for promotion to second lieutenant.

The Marine Corps said it could not divulge the names of those selected because a number of the commissions are subject to waiver recommendations before the appointments can be confirmed.

A second board will meet next month, on or about 17 March, and a third board will be convened sometime in May, to recommend about 800 additional appointments. Those who have been recommended already but who were not selected by the first board, will be re-

Army Orders Study to Cut MOS Classifications

The Army has launched a study aimed at determining the practicability of reducing the number of Military Occupation Specialties. There are now about 500 MOS's; it is believed this number may be cut to approximately 300.

The 500 current classifications represent a consolidation from the 800 MOS categories which the Army had at the end of World War II.

The survey, which is being conducted under the direction of the Office, Chief of Army Field Forces at Ft. Monroe, Va., is consistent with the Army's announced objective of guarding against over-specialization by renewed emphasis on the "MOS Soldier."

Officials explain that by reducing the number of MOS's, it will become increasingly easier to identify the true specialist. They add that manpower will be conserved, combat efficiency increased, and overhead school facilities probably reduced as a result of the study.

The Panel on Enlisted MOS Structure of the Army is headed by Col. Conrad L. Boyle. Other members are Lt. Col. John L. DeWitt, Jr., Lt. Col. George P. Nichols, Capt. Glenn E. Johnson and WOJG Emanuel Smith, recorder.

Experiences gained in Korea will play an important role in the study, which will embrace the technical and administrative services, as well as those of the ground forces.

The objectives given to Colonel Boyle and his assistants have been stated as follows:

1. Reduce the number of enlisted Military Occupational Specialties by combining and eliminating where possible.
2. Consolidate career fields where practicable.
3. Limit in simple, concise language the description of and the qualifications for a particular MOS to the level of knowledge and training required to perform a particular job in a unit in order to assist in develop-

100% Bill May Await Combat Pay Study

Senate action on the 10 per cent cost of living increase for the Armed Services probably will be held up until the Senate Armed Services Committee completes a new study of the Combat Pay bill.

Senator Russell (D-Ga.), chairman of the Committee, and many of the members feel that the extra hazard pay for combat duty in Korea should receive priority over an over-all increase for all the Services.

However, there is also a fear, supported by testimony given last week by Admiral William M. Fechteler, Chief of Naval Operations, that special combat pay would be difficult of administration and subject to possible abuses. It is to attempt to clear this up that the Committee's professional staff has been in conference virtually all week with pay experts from the Department of Defense.

Whether or not the combat pay bill will be tacked on to the cost-of-living bill as an amendment or be treated as a separate bill has not yet been finally determined. Nevertheless, there is little doubt but that the cost-of-living bill will not be reported by the committee until a decision has been reached on combat pay.

As to the cost-of-living bill itself, there is some sentiment in the committee toward giving the services more net income by providing a special military income tax exemption plus an increase in pay—but somewhat less than the 10 per cent now sought.

Number Air Forces

The Technical Training Air Force, with headquarters at Gulfport, Miss., will become the 51st Air Force and the Flying Training Air Force, Waco, Tex., will be redesignated the 52d Air Force.

Also announced was the designation of the new Combat Training Air Force as the 53d Air Force. Its headquarters are at Randolph AFB, Tex.

All three Air Forces are under the Air Training Command, Scott AFB, Ill.

Eight bases now a part of Fly TAF will comprise the 53d Air Force installation. They are Luke AFB, Ariz., and Nellis AFB, Nev., for fighter bomber-escort training; Moody AFB, Ga.; Tyndall AFB, Fla. and Perrin AFB, Texas for fighter interceptor training; and Wichita AFB, Kans.; Pinecastle AFB, Fla. and Randolph AFB, Texas, for medium bombardment training.

Pilots will be assigned to the 53d Air Force after receiving their commissions upon graduating from basic flying training. Following completion of the operational training, air crew members will be ready for assignment to combat units, needing only familiarization with local conditions before starting combat flying.

Calif. Nat. Gd. Div. In Action in Korea

The Korean ground battle area continued relatively quiet this week, with action confined to light probing attacks, minor patrol clashes, and small skirmishes on various sectors of the long front. Northwest of Yonchon an advance hill position changed hands four times. Twice the Allies were driven off the hill, and twice they recovered it without opposition. Elsewhere there were brief firefights with no significant changes in position.

Heavy Allied air attacks were made on rail communications, ammunition dumps, and supply bases, igniting fires that lighted the skies for miles. Hundreds of Russian-made Red jet planes were sighted during the week, and there were several light air combats, with a few enemy aircraft reported damaged.

United Nations warships laid down heavy bombardment fire on Red positions on both coasts of Korea. The U. S. Battleship Wisconsin laid a heavy barrage on the east coast end of the land battle line, effectively shelling enemy positions. Other Allied vessels pounded Red ports and installations on both sides of the Korean peninsula.

Announcement was made this week that the United States 40th Division had entered combat in Korea and had sustained casualties. This organization, a unit of the California National Guard, was stationed in Japan until recently. Like the 45th Division, another National Guard unit in line in Korea, it was called to active duty in the fall of 1950 at about half strength. Both units were brought to full strength, and after training in the United States were sent to Japan on occupation duty, and recently transferred to combat duty in Korea.

After the 45th Division reached Korea the 1st Cavalry Division was shifted from Korea to Japan. No announcement has yet been made of any replacement in Japan of the 40th Division.

Fight for Hill

On the western land front this week the most interesting action took place northwest of Yonchon where Allies and Reds disputed possession of an advance hill position. A small Allied force was driven off the hill on Monday, 4 February, by a strong Red attack. The following morning, counter-attacking United Nations units reoccupied the hill without opposition. Later that day the Allies withdrew in the face of a new Red assault. Heavy Allied artillery, tank and mortar fire was concentrated on the hill and the Reds withdrew, and on Wednesday, 6 February, it was again occupied by a United Nations unit, with no enemy contact.

Elsewhere on the western front there were light clashes with enemy groups up to a platoon in strength. Included among the patrol actions were several half-hour firefights with enemy platoons northwest of Korangpo-ri.

Light engagements with enemy groups up to two squads in strength were reported along the central front, with most contacts developing west of the Kumwha-Kumsong road. Elements of a United Nations tank-infantry raiding party encountered heavy artillery, mortar and long-range small arms and automatic weapons fire southwest of Pyonggang. After a brief duel the raiders withdrew.

Another Allied tank-infantry raiding team southeast of Kumsong drew enemy small arms and automatic weapons fire and then returned to its base. An Allied tank was damaged in the engagement. Other United Nations patrols on the central front reported light enemy contacts.

Patrol Engaged

On the eastern front there were light engagements with enemy groups up to a platoon in size. One Allied patrol fought an hour with a small Red force west of the Mundung-ni Valley, while another engaged small enemy units northwest of the Punch Bowl, where it received heavy small arms and mortar fire.

The U. S. 45,000-ton Battleship Wisconsin aided ground troops near the east coast with a day-long bombardment of enemy positions between Kansong and Kojo. The big dreadnaught fired more than 150 tons of 16-inch shells and 350 rounds of 5-inch shells at Red bunkers and other enemy installations. The accompanying U. S. Destroyer Brush fired more than 240 rounds of 5-inch shells at enemy positions, and also provided flak suppression fire in support of Allied Navy air attacks on enemy batteries.

Near Wonsan, the U. S. Destroyer Twining caught troops carrying ammunition and inflicted many casualties. The U. S. Destroyer Halsey Powell continued its harassing fire on rail cuts previously made in Allied air attacks in the vicinity of Wonsan.

The U. S. Destroyer Colahan dispersed a repair crew trying to fix battered tracks, previously damaged by Navy flyers. It also rained shells on rail communications and transport facilities.

Naval Gunfire

On the west coast, the British Destroyer Concord and smaller Allied Naval craft battled ice formations to move close inshore to bombard enemy-occupied villages along the coast line.

U. S. Marine fighter pilots from the U. S. Escort Carrier Badoeng Strait off the west coast in Yellow Sea waters destroyed or damaged numerous Red-occupied buildings and storage shelters. They also provided air spotting for Allied destroyers which worked over shore targets with 5-inch gunfire, destroying buildings, starting fires, and exploding an ammunition dump in a village near Ulluly.

Allied carrier-based Navy planes along the east coast ranged from Wonsan to Tanchon on interdiction missions against Red transportation arteries. Skyraiders, Corsairs and Panther jets from the U. S. Heavy Carriers Valley Forge and Antietam made hundreds of rail cuts, knocked out rolling stock, and damaged railway and highway bridges. Skyraiders and Panther jets from the Valley Forge made repeated strikes on railway tracks, bridge approaches, and machine gun emplacements in the Pachungjung area south of Hungnam.

Planes of the 1st U. S. Marine Air Wing rained bombs, rockets and napalm on the eastern front of the battle line. In addition, they knocked out boats, revetments, bridges, artillery positions, supply centers and personnel shelters. Panther jets pounded the rail line between Sinmak and Sariwon, and other planes hit supply depots, vehicles and revetments near Sohng and Sepori. They also attacked troops and rail tracks near Sinmak.

Air Activity

Warplanes of the Far East Air Force destroyed several Communist ammunition dumps and supply centers during the week, setting fires that lighted the skies for many miles. Supply bases at Namchonjon and Sinmak in Northwest Korea were ruined by the attacks, and ammunition dumps on the west coast were exploded by Marine Corsairs. Hundreds of buildings and revetments were destroyed or damaged.

Other fighter-bombers attacked enemy field pieces and destroyed ammunition storage areas in close air support strikes. Night-flying B-29 medium bombers hit the Sinanju east rail bypass bridge and attacked a steel mill at Kyomipo, while others flew close air support missions. Superforts used radar to drop 80 tons of high explosives on the Sunchon rail bridge. They encountered moderate ground fire, and sighted many enemy planes which failed to attack.

Allied F-51 propeller-driven Mustangs employed rockets, napalm and machine gun fire to attack a large troop and supply area near Haeju, destroying or damaging many buildings. American F-84 Thunderjets severed tracks in many places along the main line between Sonchon and Sinanju, and destroyed two rail bridges. F-80 Shooting Stars cut tracks between Huichon and Kunu-ri and sealed both ends of a railway tunnel with 1,000-lb. bombs.

In close air support strikes near Pyonggang, land-based Marine F4U Corsairs destroyed three Communist tanks

'Atom General' In New Post

Brig. Gen. James McCormack, Jr., USAF, who has played a key role in the nation's atomic energy program for over three years, has arrived at Baltimore, Md., to assume duties as Director of Nuclear Applications, Office of the Deputy for Development, Headquarters, Air Research and Development Command, according to Lt. Gen. Earle E. Partridge, commanding general of ARDC.

General McCormack recently was presented the Distinguished Service Medal by General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Air Force Chief of Staff. The nation's third highest military medal was awarded to General McCormack for his services as Director, Military Application Division, Atomic Energy Commission, from February 1947 to August 1951.

Col. Robert N. Isbell, who has been serving as Director of Nuclear Applications, will serve as deputy director to General McCormack.

"Bread Vs. Guns"

Mr. William M. Allen, president of Boeing Airplane Company, advocates "a system of true priorities" for the United States which will give emphasis to defense needs and cut away some of the luxuries.

Writing on "Bread Vs. Guns" in the current issue of The Boeing Magazine, Mr. Allen says Russia has been able to provide the Chinese Communists with a jet fighter force as modern as ours and at least equal in numbers to what we have seen fit to put into Korea, while at the same time continuing to build up her own air strength.

In terms of production, he says, this means "We are being outproduced."

Our program of "calculated risk," he says, has been undertaken on the double premise that "we shall be given sufficient time to rearm at a reasonably comfortable pace and, second, that we can rearm with neither serious sacrifice to our living standard nor damage to our economy. On such a foundation we have erected our policy of guns and butter."

The reason we are behind in our present defense-production schedules, he states, is that "If we are to have 'butter' in the present quantities, we cannot at the same time have 'guns' on the desired schedules."

"Self Delusion" Cited

He mentions that we have cut back original schedules, which "is a realistic approach" in a sense "for it lowers our production targets to a point where we can get them in our sights." But, Mr. Allen adds, "it is a form of self-delusion. Anyone can attain a goal if he continually lowers it to make its attainment easy."

From the viewpoint of an aircraft manufacturer, he says, "it sometimes seems that everything is in short supply except 'butter.'"

He warns, "We cannot obtain first, second and third things simultaneously. When a man is reaching for a gun to defend his life, he does not at the same time reach for a cigar and a knob on his TV set. He gives priority to the gun."

And this, according to Mr. Allen, "is what we must do: give priority to the gun—literally." He says this means "taking a leaf from our World War II book of economics and establishing a system of true priorities rather than mere allotments of material."

The aircraft industry, and the defense industries as a whole, he states, "have been trying to do a big job against a difficult time schedule with too little materials and too little manpower at our command."

He declares that "Much the same story will be repeated in the coming year, unless we make the necessary corrections. I submit that if America really needs military electronics equipment more urgently than she needs television sets, and airplanes more than aluminum roofing, then she must make certain that these things come first."

To Line School

Army Med. Serv. Reports 500 Certified Specialists

Five hundred officers now on active duty with the Army Medical Service have been certified as professional specialists, Maj. Gen. George E. Armstrong, Army Surgeon General, reported this week. This number includes 466 physicians qualified in 19 medical specialties and subspecialties, 23 board-certified dentists, seven specialists in psychology and four in nutrition.

General Armstrong said the current situation contrasts sharply with that in 1945 when there were only 75 medical board specialists on duty with the Army. He attributed the increase to inauguration of the Army Medical Service's Graduate Professional Training Program in 1947 and to the yet all of Reserve medical officers to active duty since the outbreak of the Korean conflict.

Of the total number of medical specialists, 311 are Regular Army Medical Corps officers, 148 are Reserve or National Guard physicians on extended active duty and seven are retired Regular Army officers remaining on active duty. When the Army began its residency training program five years ago, there were only 99 Regular Army and 44 non-Regular Army physicians with board certification on active duty.

All but two of the 23 dental specialists belong to the Regular Army.

The Medical Service Corps now includes six officers certified in clinical psychology and one in industrial psychology, together with four diplomates in nutrition. Six of these officers are in the Regular Army. In addition, 57 Regular Army Medical Service Corps officers have received Ph.D. degrees and possess qualifying experience in fields such as entomology and sanitary engineering where specialty board certification is not possible.

Unlike the situation during World War II, many of the Medical Service's recently certified officers have obtained all their professional training and practice in the Army.

Recently Certified

Regular Army medical officers who have recently received certification from American specialty boards include:

Anesthesiology, Lieutenant Colonels Robert R. Jones and Edward P. Shannon, Jr.; dermatology and syphilology, Maj. Walter E. Horn; internal medicine, Col. Daniel J. Wallgora and Lt. Col. William J. Thalmann; pathological anatomy, Col. Albert M. Richmond and Capt. LeGrand H. Thomas; pediatrics, Lt. Col. William W. Currence and Capt. Frederick C. Blehuson; physical medicine, Col. Harold B. Luscombe; preventive medicine and public health, Colonels James H. Gordon and Charles H. Moseley and Lt. Col. Philip B. Beckford and Walter R. DeForest.

Also, psychiatry, Lt. Col. Charles T. Brown, Raymond L. Hack and Stephen Mourat; ophthalmology, Lt. Col. Kenneth E. Hudson and John T. Martin and Maj. John E. Edwards; otolaryngology, Lt. Col. Kenneth Somers; general surgery, Col. Frank H. VanWagoner and Lt. Col. Paul V. Kiehl; Douglas Lindsey, Donald E. Reiner and David E. Thomas; orthopedic surgery, Maj. Alfred O. Heldobler; and neurological surgery, Maj. Edgar T. Pfeil, Jr.

Five previously certified Regular Army physicians have recently been certified in the following subspecialties:

Cardiovascular disease, Colonels Richard P. Johnson and Byron E. Pollock; gastroenterology, Lt. Col. Benjamin H. Sullivan and Eddy D. Palmer, and pulmonary diseases, Col. Carl W. Tempel.

Flag Officer Changes

Favor UMT, 27-7

The House Armed Services Committee, by a vote of 27-7, this week reported favorably legislation to provide Universal Military Training, but did not stipulate when the program would begin.

The bill will come up for debate in the House about 25 Feb., and Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga.) predicts its passage. A spirited floor debate is foreseen.

As reported by the House Committee, the measure would permit the calling of 18-year-olds for six months' service to be followed by a Reserve obligation of 7½ years.

The Senate Armed Services Committee opened its hearings on the UMT bill this week. Proponents of UMT have felt that the fight for its adoption will be more difficult in the Senate than in the House.

Chairman Vinson said that the objective of the UMT bill, as reported by his Committee, "is to build up a Reserve and allow the Armed Forces to reduce their standing forces."

The House group rejected the proposal that UMT be started with volunteers who would serve 18 months on active duty after completing the six months' basic training.

Physical Re-retirement

The U. S. Court of Claims on 5 Feb. decided that an officer of the Army who served on active duty prior to 12 Nov. 1918, until 1935, when he was retired for physical disability, and who was advanced in 1946 to a higher grade on the retired list for additional physical disability incurred while serving temporarily in the higher grade while on active duty during the period 1941-1946, is entitled to have counted his inactive service on the retired list from 1935 to 1941 in computing his retired pay upon reversion to inactive status in 1946.

The decision is significant in that the Court adheres to its earlier ruling in the similar case of Carroll v. The United States, 117 C. Cls. 53, decided 6 Dec. 1948, in which the Comptroller General refused to acquiesce.

The suit was brought by Maj. Arthur E. Danielson, USA-Ret. He was represented by the Messrs. Ansell and Ansell of Washington, D. C., who also represented Major Carroll.

Widow Wins Leave Case

The widow of an Army officer was awarded $1,068.00 this week by the United States Court of Claims to compensate for 45 days' accrued leave which her husband was not allowed to take before his retirement.

The opinion of the Court, delivered by Chief Judge Jones, reads in part, "We do not think that the War Department should on one hand say to a man that he is being retired because he has a permanent physical disability and is unfit for active service, and on the other hand be allowed at the same time to deny the man time or compensation for his accrued leave on the ground that his disability may not be permanent and he may be recalled to active duty at some time in the future."

Col. William M. Cravens, since deceased, had requested retirement and was informed by the Army that he would be retired on 31 Oct. 1946, a date prior to which he was not able to take all of his accrued leave. Although he protested the order, the Army adhered to its original plans "in order to effect his retirement at the end of the month."

The Court ruled that his retirement on 31 Oct. deprived him "of his rights under the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946, supra, for which he should have been compensated," and that his widow, Alice T. Cravens of Garland Co., Ark., "succeeds to that right to compensation."

A former Naval officer, Lt. Comdr. Everett R. Smith, was awarded back pay in an amount to be determined by the General Accounting Office. He had been placed on terminal leave prior to his retirement in November 1945, but suffered a coronary occlusion on the day his leave was to expire. His retirement was effected, however, on the following day, and it was only after a delay of almost a year that he was subsequently re-retired for physical disability. The Court ruled that he should be awarded back pay for the interim period because, if his physical condition had been known at the time of first separation, he would have been continued on active duty until hospitalization, examination and retirement for physical disability were completed.

New CO For MACG-3

Col. James L. Neefus has been named commanding officer of Marine Air Control Group 3, stationed at the Marine Corps Air Station, El Toro, Calif. He was formerly executive officer of Marine Air Group 15.

The new executive officer for MACG-3 is Lt. Col. Zane Thompson, former CO of MGCIS-2. He was succeeded in his previous assignment by Maj. George Howard Robertshaw.

Maj. Merrill J. Fahy, formerly with MGCIS-2, is the new adjutant of MACG-3.

Maj. Philip C. Delong is the new CO of MGCIS-4.

USNA Museum Director

Capt. Wade DeWeese, USN-Ret., has been appointed Director of the U. S. Naval Academy Museum, Annapolis, Md., to fill the vacancy caused by the recent death of Rear Adm. Harry A. Baldridge. He previously served as Curator and recently as Assistant Director under Admiral Baldridge.

FEC 36 Months Rotation

Most Army personnel are now being rotated from Korea and Japan after 36 months' constructive service. This means that an officer or enlisted man assigned to front-line combat normally will be rotated after nine months' duty, since four months' credit is given for each month in combat.

Rear-echelon troops in Korea are given two months credit for each month and in Japan credit of 1½ months for each month is given when the person is not accompanied by his dependents.

Officials stress, of course, that availability of replacements and the fundamental necessity of maintaining combat efficiency may result in some personnel serving longer than the 36-month period. Generally, however, the Army is meeting the 36-month target.

"A Word About High Brass"

The San Francisco Chronicle of 31 Jan. carried an informative editorial on the subject, "A Word About High Brass," which is published herewith in full because of its bearing on current Senate action on the military pay raise bill. The editor of the Chronicle, Paul C. Smith, served as a Navy officer and in enlisted and officer ranks of the Marine Corps during World War II.

"Economy-minded members of the Senate Armed Services Committee want to cut the higher-ranking officers out of the proposed benefits of the across-the-board 10 per cent pay boost. They are being shortsighted and we suspect some of them are also resorting to a demagogic device in a grab for votes against next election day.

"The new bill would increase the total remuneration—base pay and allowances—of a major general or rear admiral to something under $15,000 a year. If that sounds like a lot of money for the job, it is only because the public, aided and abetted by Congress, has made a practice of requiring its professional military leaders to accept a substantial chunk of their reward in intangible and inedible 'glory.'

"From almost any viewpoint the responsibilities piled upon a rear admiral or major general are equivalent to those assigned the head of a large corporation. A major general commands a division of, say, 15,000 men. He is responsible for the welfare of those men in a direct and personal way—a way without counterpart in civilian life. He is also personally responsible for a fair-sized segment of the national security. A rear admiral is likely to be in tactical command of a division of ships. This division, if you're talking about large carriers, can be worth several hundred million dollars and employ upward of 12,000 men. Here again, the personal, life-and-death responsibilities of the division commander are more direct, more severe than those of any civilian in command of equivalent manpower and property.

"Probably there are some admirals and generals who do not measure up to these responsibilities. Doubtless there are presidents of corporations who are found wanting, too.

"But the surest way private industry has found to get competent leaders into positions of authority is to offer rewards commensurate with the responsibilities, and its idea of what's commensurate runs anywhere from $25,000 a year up—mostly up. The proposal to boost flag officers' salaries by 10 per cent is a modest effort in the same direction.

"We urge that neither civilians nor GI's be fooled by the propaganda being churned up in the Senate committee. When it comes to the pinch, no GI and no civilian will want to settle for anything but topmost quality in the officers upon whose decisions their very lives depend. If officers of that caliber are to be attracted to and kept in the services, it can be done only by means of an equitable policy of reimbursement."

'Copters for Ships

A proposal to equip all hospital ships with helicopters has been approved by Admiral C. Turner Joy's Far East command and forwarded to the Defense Department.

Delivery of patients to the hospital ship Consolation by the flying eggbeaters has convinced the Navy that a flight deck and helicopters should be standard equipment on all hospital ships. Capt. C. W. Virtue, commanding officer of the Consolation, which has received 400 patients via helicopter, and Capt. John W. McElroy, made the initial recommendation.

PACIFIC JUNK REHAB

The Army Signal Corps in Japan has rebuilt and put to use nearly $30,000,000 worth of badly needed communications equipment abandoned on Pacific islands after the end of World War II.

Senator Hayden Sets Forth Reasons for UMT Support

A strong and interesting argument in behalf of adoption of a program of Universal Military Training has been set forth in a statement by Senator Carl T. Hayden (D-Ariz.).

Senator Hayden, who served as a major of infantry in World War I, has long been a staunch supporter of UMT. His statement, a new approach to the problem, grew out of correspondence with his constituents concerning his stand on the matter. It follows:

"All men are born to die but we live in a land where many men, from the Revolution to this day, have been perfectly willing to give up their lives ahead of time to make the nation free and to keep it free. That very freedom has made it possible to create such favorable living conditions that the average American can now expect to live 20 years longer than his ancestors of only three generations ago. It is not unreasonable to require a young man to devote up to two of the early part of those added twenty years to performing a duty to his country which is designed to maintain peace and to insure that his American way of life will be preserved.

"As a Member of Congress, I favored the adoption of universal military training after the first World War. If that had been done it might well have prevented World War II because the captured German records show that Hitler did not believe that the United States could get ready to fight until he had conquered all of Europe after which it would be impossible for us to defeat him. Fortunately, Great Britain did not surrender which gave us the two years time that was needed to build up our armed strength.

"As I see it, the primary purpose of a system of universal military training and service is the defense of our own country against communist aggression. We all now know that the quick demobilization of our Armed Forces at the close of hostilities in 1945 was a serious mistake. That was not done in Soviet Russia or in any of the satellite nations. The Politburo not only set up a communist government in North Korea but supplied that government with equipment and munitions for a powerful army and a large number of Korean veterans were taken out of the Soviet Armies to become the backbone of the surprise attack on South Korea. "I do not agree that service in the Armed Forces of the United States, at a time when resistance to the active threat of communist control of the entire world is essential, is an evil to be avoided. Upon the contrary, I am firmly convinced that the great majority of the millions of Americans who are veterans of the first and second world wars gained more than they lost by their military service and are today better citizens because of it.

"On the moral side, if a young man does not know the difference between right and wrong by the time he is 18, the fault lies either with his parents or his Church. The temptations which surround youth are just as great in the civilian life of most towns as in the Armed Forces and even greater because the discipline acquired by prompt obedience to lawful orders strengthens a man's will to do what he should do and do it promptly.

"There is no way of preserving a democracy except upon the basic principle that every individual participating in it owes a duty to defend it according to the best of his ability. Consequently, it is entirely proper to require those who are the most capable of performing military service to learn how to do so in an efficient manner which includes the best means of protecting their own lives in battle."

Army 25% Budget Cut Will Delay Preparedness

A 25 per cent cut in the Army fiscal year 1953 budget from that of 1952 will permit further progress toward the preparedness goal, "but at a lesser rate over a longer period of time," Assistant Secretary of the Army Karl Bendetsen declared this week.

In testimony before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee, Assistant Secretary Bendetsen noted that for fiscal year 1951, Congress voted $19 billion for the Army and $20 billion in 1952. The President's 1953 budget asks $14.2 billion. "With the appropriations the Congress has made available over the past two years," said Mr. Bendetsen, "we have acquired a momentum which is carrying us successfully towards our preparedness goal."

"But if we are to be strong enough to deter, if possible, an intending aggressor and to defend ourselves should he attack, we must not now falter in continuing to maintain and strengthen our production base, to support our forces in being, to improve our weapons, and to build up a strategic reserve of war materiel."

Assistant Secretary Bendetsen said the volume and rate of production for the Army will become satisfactory this spring—about 18 months after the procurement effort went into higher gear. "This period confirms our previous experience in mobilizing industry," he declared, "and also confirms the importance of achieving a readily expandable production base to save many critical months of time should global war be thrust upon us."

The average strength of the Army will be 1,522,000 in fiscal year 1953, compared with an expected average of 1,565,000 during fiscal year 1952.

From a pre-Korea force of 10 divisions, 13 regimental combat teams and 48 anti-aircraft battalions, the Army has grown to 19 divisions (a National Guard division will go on active duty next month to make it 20), 18 regimental combat teams and more than 100 anti-aircraft battalions.

"The meagre forces with which we started in Korea," Assistant Secretary Bendetsen related, "have become probably the most effective fighting Army ever assembled, and we have been able to sustain this Army while building a production base at home almost from the ground up."

Korea Vets Teach Tactics

One out of three of the 155 officers in the Tactical Department of the Infantry School at Ft. Benning, Ga., is a veteran of the fighting in Korea, officials related this week.

The Department, commanded by Col. Robert G. Turner, will give instruction to approximately 25,000 officers and enlisted men in fiscal year 1952.

West Point Foundation's Letter Corrected Year Ago

Corrective action on the objectionable advertising letter had been taken one year before the House Subcommittee issued its report, it is brought out in a statement released by Maj. Gen. R. M. Danford, USA-Ret., secretary-treasurer of the West Point Alumni Foundation.

The scathing report of the House Armed Services Subcommittee was based entirely on a single letter of solicitation drafted and sent out by the Foundation's advertising agent on 8 Aug. 1950.

General Danford's statement follows: "The subcommittee which made the investigation knows the affairs of the foundation are conducted on the very highest moral and ethical standards and that the foundation is rendering an honorable, worthwhile and appreciated service."

"The investigation came about because of a single form letter that, through error, went out without our knowledge or approval. This was during the summer of 1950, and the letter was immediately stopped, having been brought to our attention by a letter of complaint made to a member of Congress. A prompt letter of apology was sent to the complainant. Prior to that letter and subsequent thereto no complaints of any kind have ever been received."

"The function of the foundation is to publish an annual edition of the Register of Graduates of the Military Academy and a quarterly alumni magazine. Like the alumni publications of most educational institutions, this can be done only with the help of funds derived from advertising. Hundreds of advertisers and thousands of alumni appreciate and support these publications."

"We informed the subcommittee of the unfortunate error, not our own, and showed them that corrective action had already been taken one year prior to the time of their investigation."

Comptroller Training

A special course for training 25 Regular Army officers per year for Comptroller positions is being established at Syracuse University.

The course will be conducted annually beginning in June each year and will last for approximately 14 months.

Officers who desire this training must meet the eligibility requirements outlined in Special Regulations 350-230-1. Officers of the Infantry, Artillery and Armor should apply to The Adjutant General under the provisions of Special Regulations 350-230-52. Officers of the Technical and Administrative Services should submit applications to the Chiefs of their Service.

In order to be considered for the class beginning in June 1952, applications should reach the Department of the Army by 1 March. However, officers who already have applications for civil schooling supported by academic transcripts on file at the Department need merely to amend their current application by letter.

Complete Medical RTC Shift

Commanded by Col. Howard S. McConkie, the BAMC unit is being combined with the Medical Replacement Training Center being moved from Ft. George Meade, Md., to Camp Pickett.

"Property is the fruit of labor; property is desirable; it is a positive good in the world. That some should be rich shows that others may become rich, and hence is just encouragement to industry and enterprise.

"Let not him who is houseless pull down the house of another, but let him work diligently and build one for himself, thus by example assuring that his own shall be safe from violence when built."

Lincoln had a direct way of getting to the truth—with words just as applicable today as when he uttered them. Those who create wealth create prosperity for others by rewarding them in proportion to their efforts. This can only be done if these creators of wealth are allowed to function properly, unhampered by too many foolish or needless restrictions.

Navy Will Spend Funds On Major Procurement

Secretary of the Navy Dan A. Kimball said this week that "nearly half" of the $13 billion, 200 million requested by the Navy in 1953 "will be spent for major procurement."

In a statement before the Armed Services Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Kimball explained the process by which the Navy determines its annual procurement program. He said "Over 600 items, representing three-fourths of these procurement funds, were subjected to detailed scrutiny. The total requirements for each of these items was broken down into those required for combat consumption; initial equipment for regular forces and reserves; peacetime consumption; level of supply to support the operating forces; and the requirements during various periods of combat operations."

Then, "Stocks on hand and those stocks previously funded were credited. This," he said, "left the remaining requirement for each item. An estimate was made of availability of material and production capacity as well as the rate at which the items could be manufactured. A careful consideration of all these factors gave a firm basis upon which to estimate the amount of procurement to be included in the 1953 budget request."

Mr. Kimball revealed that he has given "full support" to a new Navy management improvement program. He said he has "instituted a concentrated drive to make everyone, top management, supervisors, craftsmen and clerks in the Navy, efficiency minded and cost conscious."

U. S. NAVY & MARINE CORPS

The Navy Secretary said "it is inevitable that some inefficiencies or waste may escape the surveillance of the most careful management scrutiny," but he assured the Committee that both he "and the military and civilian members" of his staff "are continually reviewing naval programs to streamline our operations." He said this was being done "to improve efficiency and to eradicate any waste within the Navy."

Discussing basic policies, Mr. Kimball said "careful attention" has been given by the Navy "to the ability of industry to provide our requirements." He said "The Navy's procurement has been planned to insure a continuing materiel readiness for combat operations while at the same time having sufficient stocks on hand so that our expanded forces could be operated until production would meet their full requirements." Although the Navy has "not been able to meet the latter condition," he said it hopes "to approach this necessary materiel reserve gradually."

Navy Borrows Two Marine Corps Articles of Uniform

The Navy will soon adopt two articles of the present Marine Corps uniform for wear by Naval officers.

Secretary of the Navy Dan Kimball has approved the adoption of Marine Corps officers' metal shoulder rank insignia for wear by Naval personnel on shoulder straps of the blue and khaki raincoats, and the aviation winter working overcoat. In addition, both officers and Chief Petty Officers will wear tropical garrison and cotton khaki shirts of the same style and color as those of the Marine Corps.

Standardization of rank insignia will become effective on 1 July. At present, no standard design is utilized; the interpretation of design and determination of size are left to the individual manufacturer. The Permanent Naval and Marine Corps Uniform Boards noted the comparatively wide variations in dimensions and style of rank insignia, and established new standards, with the approval of the CNO and the Marine Commandant. Samples are to be distributed to manufacturers in the near future, and purchase descriptions are being prepared for distribution to exchanges.

The style and color of the Marine Corps tropical garrison and cotton khaki shirts have been approved as standard for wear by Naval Officers and CPO's. Although present stocks of shirts on hand have not been declared obsolete, all future procurement of shirts for wear by Naval officers and CPO's will be in accordance with Marine Corps Uniform Regulations.

MarCorps Changes Uniform

New type khaki trousers have been approved for the Marine Corps, and several lesser changes to the uniform have been announced.

Sizes in the new cotton khaki trousers will be commercially graded, and the color will be changed to the recently adopted lighter khaki M-1 shade. They will be cut with a full spring and legs to provide easy fit, and will have a button-fly front, side pockets, watch pocket, rear pockets with pointed flaps, set-in separate waistband with seven belt loops, and a single-needle seam in the seat to allow for alteration.

Other changes include new instructions for wearing the field boot and service ribbons, and the adoption of a green dress necktie for women officers.

The newly adopted field boot, which is to become a standard item of Marine Corps footwear in place of the present field shoe and leggings, may be prescribed for wear with both service and utility uniform. "At the discretion of the commanding officer," the Marine Corps states, "trousers may be tucked into the top of the field boot," but should be worn so the trousers "bag freely and evenly over the top of the boot and permit full freedom of movement."

Service ribbons measuring one-half inch in length "are no longer authorized," the announcement said. Instructions now in effect, state that all service ribbons worn on the Marine Corps uniform must be 3/4-inch in length.

The new green dress necktie for women officers is a required item for wear with a white shirt as part of the winter dress and winter undress "A" uniforms. It is currently stocked at the Marine Corps Exchange, Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va., in a tropical worsted material. Women officers who wish to purchase the tie may direct their order by mail to the Exchange Officer, MCS, Quantico, together with a money order or personal check in the amount of eighty-five cents, made payable to the Marine Corps Exchange.

5th Mar. Div. Scholarships

The Fifth Marine Division Association has opened a scholarship fund drive to help educate sons and daughters of Fifth Marine Division veterans who died of wounds or were killed in action.

The Scholarship Fund, first of its kind to be sponsored by a Marine division organization, is planned to be a continuous program, and will aid students who otherwise would be unable to continue their education.

Initially, scholarships will be awarded to prospective college students or to deserving students already attending college. Maximum aid per person has been set at $500 per year for four years.

Children of deceased veterans of other branches of service who served with the Fifth Division will also be eligible for consideration.

The scholarship program was introduced at the 1951 Division convention by Maj. Gen. W. A. Worton (Ret.), then president of the Association. The motion met with enthusiasm and a scholarship committee was appointed.

General Keller E. Rockey (Ret.), wartime leader of the Division, headed the original committee, which is now composed of Lt. Col. Robert S. Riddell (chairman), Maj. Thomas M. Fields, M/Sgt. Merl Smith, M/Sgt. Richard L. Harris, and Mr. Allen M. Jones, Association Legal Officer, and former Fifth Division Legal Officer.

"A contribution of one dollar from each Marine who served with the Fifth Division will get the program under way," General Rockey said, "and will make initial scholarship allotments possible in the Fall of 1952."

The General said he is "confident that all Marines, everywhere, will wholeheartedly support this living memorial to our fallen comrades."

Contributions may be addressed to the Secretary-Treasurer, Fifth Marine Division Association, Headquarters, Marine Corps, Washington 25, D. C.

Marine Request-Masts

General Lemuel C. Shepherd, jr., Commandant of the Marine Corps, this week took steps to establish "request" masts at Marine bases where personnel can air their troubles without fear of reprisal.

The action fulfills a recommendation made last October by the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee which had visited numerous Navy and Marine Corps bases and reported on "disquieting" conditions at some of the installations. The Subcommittee recommended that the "establishment of 'request mast' and inspection systems" within the Marine Corps "which will in fact afford enlisted personnel a fair and private hearing for their grievances without fear or reprisals being taken against them."

General Shepherd's order this week directs commanding officers to hold request mast "at least twice each month" providing the exigencies of the service permit. He cited Article 0709 of U. S. Navy Regulations, 1948, as providing "the necessary basic instructions" to govern the establishment of such masts. The Article reads, in part:

"The commanding officers shall . . . afford an opportunity, with reasonable restrictions as to time and place, for the personnel under his command to make requests, reports, or statements to him, and shall insure that they understand the procedures for making such requests, reports, or statements."

However, in order to "preclude misunderstanding," General Shepherd directed CO's to "publish to their commands a procedure that should be followed for the hearing of grievances at request mast," and to:

- 1—Designate a specific time, both as to hour and date.
  - 2—Designate the place where request mast will be held.
  - 3—Hold request mast at least twice a month.
  - 4—Make it clear that the individual need state his problem to no one except the officer before whom he wishes to appear.
  - 5—Assure personnel who avail "themselves of the right of request mast in good faith" that they "may do so without fear of prejudice to their interests."
- The Senate Subcommittee had reported that dissatisfaction at Marine bases was partly due to "lack of a realistic system through which an enlisted man may receive a fair hearing for his grievances." The average Marine, the report said, "feels that, should he complain, reprisals will be taken against him. He harbors little hope that his complaint will be acted upon."
- The Subcommittee said, "This, at best, presents an unhealthy situation. Responsible officers are kept in ignorance of many deficiencies in their commands which warrant immediate correction," and "Men with legitimate and justifiable grievances can find no outlet for them, and thus become disgruntled as abuses go unchecked."

Medal of Honor

A Marine veteran of World War II has been awarded the Medal of Honor posthumously.

Sergeant James Irlesley Poynter, 33, of Downey, Calif., saved his platoon by giving his life in a lone charge which wiped out three enemy machine gun crews during initial contact with Chinese Communist forces.

The citation said Sgt. Poynter, already wounded in hand-to-hand combat against overwhelming enemy forces, saw three machine guns setting up only 25 yards away. Gathering hand grenades from fallen comrades, he stormed all three positions in rapid succession, killing the crews of two guns and "putting the other out of action before he fell, mortally wounded."

Mrs. Kathern G. M. Poynter, his widow, lives with their son and three daughters at 8463 Everest street, Downey, Calif. The medal will be presented his widow at a later date.

WRONG CLASSIFICATION

Although not classed as "combatant" ships, more minesweepers in Korean waters have been sunk by mines or hit by enemy shore battery fire than any other type of ship.

Soldier's Medal For USN Dr.

Comdr. Robert A. Conrad, jr., MC, USN, has been awarded the Soldier's Medal for an act of heroism at Eniwetok Atoll, Marshall Islands, on 27 March 1951. An L-13 aircraft approaching Japan Island, for a routine air drop, struck several palm trees and crashed, immediately bursting into flames. Commander Conrad, with complete disregard for his own safety, rushed to the aircraft and with the assistance of two companions removed the pilot from the wreckage.

The award was presented by Rear Adm. W. J. C. Agnew, MC, USN, Commanding Officer, National Naval Medical Center, Bethesda, Md., where Commander Conrad is on duty. Dr. Conrad resides with his wife and child at 9513 Montgomery Drive, Bethesda.

considered by one of the two later boards without any further recommendation.

Service-in-grade requirements for technical sergeants have been lowered from 15 months to 12 months, thus permitting a larger number of recommendations from that rank for the next two boards.

WO Program

A program to commission enlisted personnel in temporary warrant officer ranks is also now underway. Applicants who are recommended for WO commissions will be given the WO Proficiency Test scheduled for 14 April. Women Marines also may be recommended for appointment under this program, details of which were announced in Marine Corps Memorandum 120-51, and Change 1.

Marine Commandant General Lemuel C. Shepherd, Jr., explained that it is his intention to fill Warrant Officer vacancies in the Marine Corps "from deserving and well qualified master sergeants and technical sergeants," both Regulars and Reservists on extended active duty.

Applicants must:

- 1—Be citizens of the United States.
- 2—Not have reached their 45th birthday on 30 June 1952.
- 3—Have a GCT score of at least 105.
- 4—Have been on active duty for at least one year immediately preceding 30 June 1952.
- 5—Be physically qualified to perform full duty in the field.

6—If Reservists, agree to serve on extended active duty for a period of not less than 17 months from date of acceptance of temporary appointment unless sooner released or appointment is terminated for cause.

All appointments under the new program will be in the grade of temporary warrant officer (W-1). Regulars will receive temporary appointments in the regular Marine Corps, and Reservists will be temporarily commissioned in the Reserve. No waivers will be granted for any of the basic requirements.

The announcement pointed out that "applicants are not restricted to consideration in the Occupation Field of their primary MOS. They may choose any Occupational Field in which they feel they have the necessary qualifications, except 12, 73 and 99, which have no warrant officer jobs."

Naval Aviation Pilots will retain their flight status if appointed to the grade of warrant officer.

As reported in THE JOURNAL last week, some of the Corps' ranking master sergeants have been complaining about the commissioning program. Many of them are too old to be considered for appointment as second lieutenant and they say that if they accept appointment as warrant officers they will get less money, providing they have as many as three dependents.

However, after the initial memorandum was issued announcing the Warrant Officer program, a change was promulgated which states that "Individuals appointed will be entitled to saved pay in accordance with paragraph 78309, Marine Corps Manual." Presumably, this means that no man would suffer a loss of pay by entering the WO structure, but THE JOURNAL is awaiting a clarifying statement from the Marine Corps on this aspect of the program.

The form for making application is contained in Memorandum 120. After completion, the application is to be forwarded via official channels to the Commandant, with an endorsement by the commanding officer evaluating the applicant's potentiality as a warrant officer. The CO may use one of six remarks:

- 1—Unsuitable, not recommended.
- 2—Recommended, but with hesitancy.
- 3—Recommended, as adequate.
- 4—Recommended with confidence.
- 5—Enthusiastically recommended.
- 6—No recommendation — insufficient observation.

Following the written examinations in April, a selection board will take final action and appointments will be effected during June 1952.

Sec'y. Finletter Calls For 143-Wing Air Force

Any decrease in the 126-wing Air Force structure approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff last October "would be most unwise," Secretary of the Air Force Thomas K. Finletter told a Senate Appropriations subcommittee this week opening hearings on the fiscal year 1953 budget.

Secretary Finletter noted that the Air Force would receive $20.7 billion to move from the present authorized strength of 80 combat wings and 15 troop carrier groups toward 126 combat wings, 17 troop carrier groups and support units.

He said the 143-wing strength will not be attained as early as the Joint Chiefs of Staff consider desirable, "from a purely military point of view," but added that other factors had to be taken into consideration by the Executive Branch to arrive at a balance "which appears best for the long term security of the nation."

Mr. Finletter was questioned as to whether the proposed budget was adequate for the Air Force. In this regard, it is to be noted that Congress during the past several years has actually voted more funds for the Air Force than were asked in the President's budget.

In an election year, there is emphasis on economy at Capitol Hill, but the initial questioning of Mr. Finletter indicated that the legislators want to make certain the Air Force has enough money to carry out its mission.

Manpower Conservation

In the field of manpower, Secretary Finletter told of plans to increase personnel by only 17 per cent while expanding combat units by 50 per cent. Previously, General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, USAF Chief of Staff, had stated plans to increase manpower only 20 per cent, but this has now been cut to 17 per cent.

The 95-wing force had an authorized military strength of 1,061,000, while the 143-wing organization will have 1,210,000 — an increase of only 13 per cent.

Civilian personnel will be raised 30 per cent.

Concluding his Senate testimony, Secretary Finletter stated:

Indispensable To Security

"The force structure of 126 combat wings—or 143 wings if the troop carriers are included—is one which is indispensable to the security of this country and to our hopes of preventing another war. The date of readiness is not as soon as the military chiefs would like to see it, but on the whole the dates when the various units will come into being is an acceptable one.

"The Air Force as it stands today is a strong force. It is already a great deterrent to war. Its power will increase if these appropriations are granted. As we build to and finally reach the force we are asking for in this appropriation, we will have a force which will make any possible enemy think a very long time before he attacks us. But the force we are asking for is indispensable. It has a vital part in our policy of trying to prevent the happening of war.

Finance Center Saves Million

An annual saving of nearly a million dollars through re-programming of functions based on daily cost-management studies has been effected in the budget for the Air Force Finance Center, Denver, Colo., it is revealed by the Center commander, Brig. Gen. John R. Gilchrist, USAF.

The savings are the result of improved operational methods put into practice at the financial capital of the Air Force during the first year of its establishment, which led to the abolishment of 300 jobs, none of which has been filled by the Center to date, but which were formerly included in the organization program.

Reassign Three Generals

The Air Force has announced the reassignment of three General officers.

Maj. Gen. Charles T. Myers, Vice Commander, Air Defense Command, Ent AFB, Colo., has been named Commander-in-Chief, U. S. Northeast Command and Commanding General, Northeast Air Command, to succeed Maj. Gen. Lyman P. Whitten, effective 14 March.

General Whitten has been assigned as Commanding General, Middletown Air Materiel Area, Olmsted AFB, Pa., effective 21 April.

General Myers will be replaced by Maj. Gen. Frederic H. Smith, Jr., now Commanding General, Eastern Air Defense Force, Stewart AFB, Newburgh, N. Y.

No replacement for General Smith has been named and no assignment has yet been announced for Brig. Gen. Thomas B. McDonald, now Commanding General, Middletown Air Materiel Area.

Command Dental Meeting

Maj. Gen. George R. Kennebeck, USAF (DC), Chief of the Air Force Dental Service, conducted the annual Major Command Dental Surgeons Conference on 7 and 8 Feb. in Chicago. Each Dental Surgeon presented a description of the dental service in his respective command. Items of policy affecting the Air Force Dental Service were presented by Col. John K. Sitzman, USAF (DC), Office of The Surgeon General.

Command Dental Surgeons who participated were: Col. Jack D. Collins, Continental Air Command; Col. Robert D. Johnson, Air University; Col. Lee M. Lightner, Air Training Command; Col. Jack M. Messner, Headquarters Command; Col. Edmund F. Wipf, Air Materiel Command; Lt. Col. John R. Eastman, Air Research and Development Command; Lt. Col. Kenneth R. Elwell, Strategic Air Command; Lt. Col. Sydney G. Gordon, Air Defense Command; Lt. Col. Wm. R. T. Oakes, Tactical Air Command; and Maj. Douglas C. Wendt, Military Air Transport Service.

Flight Lunches Hiked

The price of flight lunches has been doubled by the Air Force. Formerly 35 cents, the lunches will now cost officers 70 cents. Airmen who are on separate rations and not on leave status will pay 40 cents. Food Service units formerly allowed the amount of a garrison ration, about $1.15 for the lunches, now must spend no more than 70 cents.

tables, tumbling wheels, fuels and lubricants analyzers, tensile strength devices, computers, to mention only a few, are used in each laboratory.

During recent years the development concept of a modern fighting air weapon has changed considerably. In the past, an aircraft's equipment was developed separately and emerged as a series of black boxes which were scattered throughout the airplane in convenient locations. This was a feasible approach when equipments were simple and weapons performance requirements, as the Air Force now visualizes them, were fairly easy to achieve. The current requirements for greater speed, higher altitudes, and increased accuracy, however, have necessitated the development of equipment which rivals the basic airplane and engine in time required for development. In fact, in many cases, development time required for such items as the modern fire control and bombing systems exceeds that for the airplane itself. In addition, these items often must be tailored to specific airplanes and vice versa. The Air Force no longer concentrates only on developing the airplane that will fly the fastest and fly the highest. Its aim is to develop the best air weapon.

All of the Wright Air Development Center laboratories have been in existence for some years. Each of them—the Aero Medical, Aircraft, Flight Research, Materials, Equipment, Photographic Reconnaissance, Power Plant, Propeller, Armament, Communication and Navigation, Components and Systems, and Aircraft Radiation—is devoted to the development and test of its particular portion of the complete aircraft or missile, or it is concerned with a specific category of research in support of the above development. Management of these various laboratories is organized to give emphasis to the weapons systems concept.

WADC and industry work as a team on development projects. WADC must translate requirements into specifications which provide the basis for the development work done by industry. During the development WADC monitors the project and subsequently tests it under the many conditions of required operation. This leads to the formulation of a specification satisfactory for quantity procurement.

The range of specialized activities reflected in some 1,300 active research and development projects presently being conducted within the Center program is indicative of the diversity of requirements of our modern-day Air Force.

In the field of aircraft armament, for example, considerable effort is being directed toward the development of new bombing systems, fire control systems, and special armament test equipment compatible with current requirements of speed, altitude and accuracy. Infallibility must be built into automatic electronic and radar computers to assist the pilot, gunner, navigator, and bombardier. An answer must be found in the Air Force's current effort to develop a system which will seek, locate, and track a target, and automatically fire an airborne weapon in such a manner as to assure a "kill."

An expansion of activity in electronics at the Center emphasizes the need for new developments in this field. Current projects underway include the development of radio noise suppression, electronic guidance systems for air and ground launched missiles, radio and radar control links for remote control of aircraft, rescue lifeboats, and other equipment.

Many flight instruments are currently under development to meet requirements for airplanes still on the drawing boards. Effort in the equipment field also is being devoted to the development of more efficient and reliable parachutes, electrical systems and associated controls, cargo and ground handling equipment, training devices, fire fighting equipment, aerial delivery and pick-up systems, and specialized Air Force clothing.

In the field of propulsion, much attention is focused on effecting progressive advancements in turbo jet, turbo prop, ram jet, and rocket engines, along with continuous improvements of reciprocating engines. In addition, studies are in progress to probe all possible applications of atomic energy to the propulsion of aircraft.

Investigations in the materials field have been accelerated by the ever-increasing requirements of the newer engine types. Of special importance are metallurgical studies having as their urgent objective the development of alloys and coatings with greater head resistance for jet and rocket propulsion devices. A far-sighted policy also requires that we pursue every means to obtain substitute materials for those expected to be scarce during times of emergency.

Much additional effort at the Center is being devoted to "human engineering" experiments. Considerable progress already has been made in gaining knowledge of human tolerances to extreme altitude, to explosive decompression, to high accelerations, of short duration, to effects of vibration, and to the extremes of environmental temperatures.

Outperforms Its Maker

The field of aviation has reached the development stage where the airplane, the product of man, can outperform its maker. Active work is being carried on by the Air Force at WADC to increase the human's ability to cope with modern flight requirements.

The matter of aerial photo reconnaissance, too, is of considerable moment in WADC's program, and laboratory study is being aimed at the development of aerial cameras, techniques, and equipment for operation at very high speeds and altitudes under conditions of daylight and darkness.

The Air Force's varied and increasingly complex developments, and they are many, point to one obvious fact—the design of an aircraft or missile cannot be considered as final until man has completely exhausted his technical ingenuity. An air research and development program, therefore, must be continuous to be effective. On this continuity depends to a great extent the maintenance of the air superiority necessary to keep this nation secure. Research and development personnel at WADC, and at all Air Research and Development installations, realize the magnitude of their responsibilities. They, along with their co-workers in science and industry, are pursuing their objectives with determination.

Dedicates Fly TAF

Lt. Gen. Robert W. Harper, Commanding General, ATRC, this week dedicated the Headquarters, Flying Training Air Force at Waco, Tex., which, he said, marks "another step forward in this nation's purpose to lead the world to freedom, liberty and justice."

He said the FTAF and the ATC "are dedicated to the proposition that the American pilot is the best in the world. We are in business to assure that he continues to be the best trained pilot, the best equipped pilot, sustained successfully in combat by highly trained technicians, wherever men fight in the skies."

In a speech at the annual banquet of the Waco Chamber of Commerce on the day before the dedication ceremony, General Harper said no "logistical comparison" can be made between WWII air strength and our present air strength "in terms of the relative numbers of groups and wings." He pointed out that "Because of vast increases in bomb loads, firepower and range, one of today's 'Wings' often packs from seven to ten times as deadly a wallop as did a World War II Group."

Army Navy Air Force Journal 705
9 February 1952

"The 10 per cent cost-of-living increase that is being proposed now will scarcely make up for the inroads inflation has already made into family market baskets and rent bills."—ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF DEFENSE ANNA M. ROSENBERG.

Calculated Risks in the Budget. Secretary of Defense Lovett's masterful presentation of the facts behind the '53 budget leaves Congress and the public in no uncertainty as to the risks involved should attempts be made to reduce it arbitrarily.

Taking $25 billion from the original estimates of the three military Departments must result in a slowing down of the build-up and a postponing of the date when our preparedness goals will be reached. In fact, the Budget figure was arrived at only by sacrificing a year or more in reaching the dates at which various defense components will be combat-worthy. Secretary Lovett used the expression "a stretch-out of the period in which readiness is to be developed" and pointed out that in doing so "we believe that all of the calculated risks considered prudent have been accepted." It must be kept in mind that the objectives we have been seeking are not attainable under the budget estimates, for it will permit the Army to progress only toward its goal of 21 full strength divisions; the Navy toward 408 combat vessels with 16 carrier air groups; the Marine Corps toward three full divisions and three air wings; and the Air Force toward 143 wings.

Mr. Lovett gave convincing reasons why his Department is accepting the $52.4 billion figure. The original military requests, he said, would now be unrealistic because of the lack of materials within the compressed period of time and because they might jeopardize the economy or financial stability of the country. Furthermore, to build up to a peak of full current equipment might lead to abrupt and permanent shut-downs of production lines which not only would harm the economy but also deprive the defense establishment of the "great strength which moving and living lines of production would give us." Then, too, promise of unusual technological advances makes it desirable to stretch out procurement of some items.

In an election year it is certain there will be vigorous efforts to make economies, and charges of "waste" will be freely made. In those instances where concrete facts are brought forward, the Congress may be assured of prompt and effective action by the military to correct any faults uncovered, for they, with equal fervor, want to squeeze the full value from every defense dollar. But Congress must not be misled in the belief that billions can be saved on light bulbs and T-squares.

Mr. Lovett's statement was most clear: "With a lesser amount of money we would be limiting our efforts to a program level that would increase, beyond the realms of prudence, the calculated risks already taken." His solemn warning should be reread by every Congressman every day until the appropriation bill is enacted.

What About the Widows?

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

Under the present system of death compensation under the Veterans Administration the widow of a career serviceman who may have served his country for 29 years and is lost in action in Korea receives $75 per month. Had the serviceman been injured he would have been entitled to disability compensation, or had he been fortunate enough to live until he retired after 30 years of service he would be entitled to a substantial monthly retirement pension.

On the other hand, if a reserve officer is killed in Korea his widow—if the man was in the Army or Air Force reserve—would be entitled to 40% of his full pay if there are no minor children. If there are minor children she would receive 40% of full pay, plus 15% of full pay for each minor child, but not to exceed 75% of full pay.

Since this is the status of death compensation for widows of men who sacrifice their lives in combat, or in an extra-hazardous duty capacity, under the present "unfunded" retirement benefit procedure in the Armed Forces, can you tell me why the career officer's widow is given a niggardly compensation after many years of service and the reserve officer's widow is given compensation under the Federal Employees Compensation Act? As far as I know the reserve officer does not have deductions from his pay on a funded basis, as are other Federal Civil Service employees, yet his widow receives a substantial death compensation; whereas the career serviceman works many years under low salaries to build up a substantial retirement only to have this "unfunded" retirement vanish into thin air when he dies in line of duty.

It seems to me some sort of bookkeeping system should be in order just to keep the records straight and to avoid having widows of Generals and Admirals take such a tremendous cut in their living standard when death occurs in line of duty before the career serviceman is eligible to draw his retirement benefits which he accumulated through the many years of service.

It is falsely assumed by the general public that servicemen are "well heeled." This is not true; but if it were will you tell me why the widows of Federal organization. Many are elderly and unable to work. Those who are employed and make more than $1,800 a year ($3,000 if they have dependents) are deprived of their small pensions.

The sad plight of these relics of those who served the nation in its need should stir Congress to increase all widows' pensions to realistic amounts and to act on a survivors' benefit bill supported by government funds.

Failure to enact the pay raise bill by 1 Feb. meant a loss of $70 million to Service personnel. Meantime, the Cost-of-Living Index has gone up again. Everything's up but Service incomes.

10 Years Ago—

A surprise attack has been made upon Japanese naval and air bases in the Marshall and Gilbert Islands by surface and air units of the Pacific Fleet. While no large enemy combatant vessels were found, many fleet auxiliaries were sunk, beached or damaged.

50 Years Ago—

The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has reported favorably on a bill authorizing construction of a Government cable across the Pacific from California to Hawaii and the Philippine Islands, via Midway and the Island of Guam.

85 Years Ago—

Instruction to recruiting officers: "Hereafter, boys under 21 will not be enlisted except for the purpose of learning music, and then only under authority from the Superintendent of Recruiting Service, or the Adjutant General of the Army, after the written consent of the parent, guardian or master has been obtained."

Judges, Senators and Congressmen who die in line of duty receive as much as $525 a month death compensation because of their husbands' service to our country? Or is it assumed that on small Armed Forces salaries, and constant moving about, one can save more money than can $15,000 a year Senators and Congressmen and $20,000 a year Federal Judges?

Perhaps it will cost $200,000 a year to administer the Kilday Bill, but then men can go into battle and know that their loved ones will be spared the hardships and economic deprivations with which servicemen's widows are faced today, especially those who are on in years and can not work and those who have small children to care for on the VA allowances of $1, or less, per day.

Wants Profession, Not Job

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

Early in my grammar school education I decided upon a career as a professional soldier. Subsequently I attended, and was graduated from the U. S. Military Academy as an Officer in the Regular Army.

I do not ask benefits, or extra pay, or social security, or any of the other socialistic systems to insure my rights. I don't even particularly care for a pay raise, although at times the financial squeeze is pretty tight. I do not want privileges over any other group of officers, nor do I feel myself superior to any of them. I ask but one thing.

I would like to pursue my profession as an Army Officer with Honor and Respect. Just that! Nothing else! I don't want to be a Civil Service worker. I don't want to be an Administrative day laborer. I don't want a job with rights, benefits, guarantees, social security programs, and paternalistic care. I want a profession!

All of which adds up to this—I want to become a free, respected, honorable, and freely accepted citizen of the United States occupied in an honorable profession. Must I resign my Commission to accomplish this goal?

PRESIDENT Truman's announcement of a $5 to $6 billion atomic expansion program has raised numerous questions in editorials and columns.

Ray Cromley in the Wall Street Journal, reports that "within five years, the U. S. will be turning out several hundred atom bombs, atom shells and atom warheads a year." He states, "Pentagon strategists are already trying to determine how much they are going to have to overhaul the whole Army, Navy and Air Force organization."

The Cincinnati Inquirer wonders how the figure was arrived at, but says we must "put our trust" in the AEC, the limited group of military leaders, and the "few members of Congress," who "know what technical progress has been made in the atomic weapons program."

Hanson Baldwin, writing in the New York Times, looks at the secrecy which surrounds atomic development as harmful to military efficiency and indicates that the services should begin a large-scale program of atomic education.

"Why . . . this sudden invitation by Congress to the AEC and the Defense Department to come help themselves to more money?", the Wilmington (Del.)

Morning News asks. The answer—"it appears that our gigantic nuclear program is well administered, and that we have gained ourselves an edge. Now we intend to widen it."

The award of a contract for a second atomic airplane engine makes the Bridgeport (Conn.) Post "assume that . . . tremendous progress has been recorded in this highly secret field of man's latest scientific endeavor."

The St. Paul Dispatch also believes the nation "is seeing a great new movement in modern global defense tactics beginning."

And the Seattle Post-Intelligencer adds its voice to the belief that "atomic scientists have made important new discoveries in nuclear fission."

Gill Robb Wilson, in the New York Herald Tribune, discusses the value of strategic air power as related to new atomic weapons and says "Every evidence indicates that tactical atomic weapons will push massed armies further toward obsolescence than any other influence ever developed."

The Houston Post sounds the ominous note: "Since missile firing submarines will probably be developed in due course, few cities will be safe from attack by atomic bombs."

U. S. Leaders at Lisbon NATO Meeting

GENERAL of the Army Omar N. Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, with Vice Adm. Jerauld Wright and Vice Adm. Arthur C. Davis, and a group of staff officers, are scheduled to reach Lisbon today, there to attend meetings of the Standing Group and the Military Committee of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization occupying most of the coming week. They will stay over for the Council meeting of the following week, which Secretary of State Acheson and Defense Secretary Lovett will also attend.

Both Admirals Wright and Davis are on the threshold of new duties announced on Wednesday. The former goes to London as Commander of U. S. Naval Forces, Eastern Atlantic, and Deputy Commander in Chief, U. S. Naval Forces Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean (subordinate, that is, to Admiral Robert B. Carney who now maintains his headquarters at Naples); in this dual role he succeeds Rear Adm. Walter F. Boone, who has been holding down the three-star post in London and who will return to Washington late this month as chairman of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee of the Joint Chiefs (succeeding Rear Adm. Thomas H. Robbins, jr.). Admiral Davis, who has been director of the Joint Staff, is taking over Admiral Wright's Washington post as Deputy U. S. Representative on the Standing Group of NATO. The changes will be effective at the close of the Lisbon meetings.

The purely military meetings in London, in advance of the Council's gathering on 18 February, face extensive and important agenda. The Atlantic Area Command (lately given to Adm. Lynde D. McCormick) now is at last out of the debating stage; so much of its work has been set up by the North Atlantic Ocean Area Regional Planning Group and by a special group at Norfolk (which for months has been actually functioning on an informal basis) that there is little prospect of disagreement on details. But the European Command will have its troubles for a long time to come; the past week has provided its own irritation in the form of reports (promptly and officially denied though they were) that West Germany is preparing to insist upon early inclusion in NATO on identical terms with the other members. These reports—encouraged by outspoken zealots who are always in a fever for speed at any cost—will undoubtedly continue, especially when this sort of thing is set off by excessive zeal among other nations. Yet on the part of Chancellor Adenauer himself there is full understanding that the integrated western defense, which Adenauer wishes as much as anyone, calls for giving as well as taking, and for calm as well as energy.

The Lisbon agenda include, for example, submission of the Three Wise Men's written report on what all NATO nations should be able to contribute to the pool, and this is a sterling example of giving as well as taking. They include a continuing discussion of economic union pioneered by the Schuman plan, and most notably of the projected European Army upon which very large progress has been made since the Council's recent Rome meeting. Here, obviously, is a very solid subject; largely through the tact and drive of General Eisenhower the "impossibles" of a year ago have become probabilities, but they remain a long way from certainties, and their progress in that direction will long continue to call for still more of the patience and understanding which have been shown thus far by the responsible chiefs.

Imminent admission of Greece and Turkey to NATO as full members raises again the question of NATO command in the Middle East, its extent, and its relation both to SHAPE and to SHAPE's Southern Sector which Admiral Carney heads. It will be impossible to arrive at any final judgment on this point until the Suez problem is out of the fire, for Suez will obviously be a very important part of anything which could be called a Middle East Command. The new Government in Egypt appears to be making progress toward a rational relationship with the western nations. One suspects

Truce in Korea Seems Nearer

THE unexpected death of King George VI of Great Britain this week caused profound grief throughout the world, and particularly in the United States, where the British monarch was greatly admired. His visit to the United States a dozen years ago had strengthened the traditional ties of friendship of the two countries. The death of the king will mean no change in foreign or domestic policies of England. Under the constitutional monarchical system of England the king is automatically succeeded by his eldest daughter, who reigns as Queen Elizabeth II. The young queen recently visited Washington and captivated the people by her friendliness and charm.

Cautious optimism was expressed this week by United Nations delegates to the Korean armistice conference over the prospects for ultimate success in the conclusion of a truce. This sentiment was evident despite a warning from the high command that no agreement had been reached on any of the major points of difference. There were a number of concessions by both sides on minor points and the atmosphere of the conference had improved to an encouraging extent.

Without waiting for completion of discussions on supervision of the proposed armistice and on arrangements for exchanging prisoners of war, both of which engendered much friction, the delegates agreed to consider the fifth and final point on the conference agenda, recommendations to the governments concerned as to action to be taken after an armistice is arranged. The Communists promptly came up with a proposal for a political conference to be held within three months after the conclusion of an armistice, to arrange for withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea, to establish peace in that country and to settle other international problems of the Far East. The Allies agreed to study the Red proposal, but in its present form it is regarded as unacceptable.

► DETAILS OF THE RED PROPOSAL and counter-proposals of the Allies as to recommendations for a political conference will be considered by joint committee, it is understood, which will discuss details of the proposal. The attitude of the Allies is that the Panmunjom military conference to negotiate an armistice is not in a position to prescribe specific measures to be discussed at a political conference, and that it should avoid details covering such a meeting. The Reds, on the other hand, are insistent that there be a definite recommendation as to early withdrawal of foreign troops.

With the formation of a new committee on recommendations for future action the three most important topics on which there is a divergence of opinion are to be considered by joint committees. The other two are those on terms and supervision of an armistice and exchange of prisoners of war. The negotiators are still far from an agreement on Allied demands for a ban on airfield construction, and for voluntary, rather than compulsory repatriation of prisoners of war and displaced civilians. However, most other points on which there has been disagreement appear to be near a settlement.

The Communists have acceded to an Allied demand that war prisoners released as the result of the negotiations be placed on parole not to fight again in Korea. The Reds have dropped their insistence on control of islands off the west coast of Korea, south of the 38th parallel. Allied delegates have suggested that troop rotation be continued during an armistice, preferably with no monthly maximum figure prescribed. Previously the Reds had agreed to 25,000 a month, while the Allies wanted the number put at 40,000. The actual number rotated by the Allies during the past few months has averaged about 25,000.

► ALLIED DELEGATES expressed more optimism this week over the possible success of the conference than had been evident in a long time. Rear Admiral R. E. Libby, USN, one of the United Nations representatives, said he thought that it might be possible to reach an agreement soon on exchange of prisoners of war. Brig. Gen. Wm. P. Nuckolls, USAF, spokesman for the United Nations delegates, expressed the opinion that the conference had moved closer to an armistice, and he indicated that this feeling was shared by the Reds.

Taking note of reports of improved prospects for a possible successful termination of the long drawn-out truce talks the Allied high command in the Far East hastily warned against over-optimism. In an unofficial, but authoritative information bulletin issued by Far East headquarters in Tokyo it was pointed out that "recent minor compromises" reached at the Panmunjom armistice conference do not necessarily mean any change in the Communist program of "bargaining inertia." Attention was directed to the fact that Red delegates have agreed to none of the major points in dispute.

At the closing session of the Paris meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations this week the western proposal to postpone consideration of Korean issues by the United Nations until the conclusion of an armistice was overwhelmingly adopted, despite vigorous opposition by the Soviet bloc. The vote was 51 in favor of postponing discussion of the Korean conflict and 5 against, with 2 abstentions. Only Russia and her satellites voted against the resolution. The Soviet delegation had urged that Korean armistice discussions be transferred from Panmunjom to the United Nations.

► PROSPECTS BRIGHTENED this week for an amicable settlement of the British-Egyptian dispute over the abrupt termination by Egypt of treaties covering the right of English troops to guard the Suez Canal, and of England to share in control of the Sudan. Aly Maher Pasha, the new Egyptian premier, has indicated a willingness to negotiate issues in dispute, and to give serious consideration to such matters as the proposed Middle East Command, and an inter-Arab security pact.

It is reported without confirmation that Britain has made a peace offer to Egypt through Premier Nuri El Said of Iraq. This report lacks official verification, and the suggested terms are considerably more favorable to Egypt than any likely to be proposed by England.

In the British House of Commons this week Foreign Minister Anthony Eden reported on the recent visit to the United States made by Prime Minister Winston Churchill and Mr. Eden. The British foreign minister heatedly denied Labor accusations that there may have been secret agreements reached for extending the Korean war to the territory of Red China should there be a breach of the proposed truce. He said the only agreement was for prompt consultation in such an eventuality. He deplored the anti-American attitude of some Labor members. Mr. Eden expressed the belief that the chances for world peace had materially improved since Mr. Churchill had become prime minister.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Navy League On Tactical Air—The president of the Navy League, Frank Hecht, has declared his organization should support any demand by the Army for more tactical aircraft and more control by the Army over tactical air operations. In the League's publication, "Now Hear This," Mr. Hecht states: "The Navy League should base its support not by posing as experts in the subject matter but on the ground that it believes each service is the best judge of what weapons it needs to accomplish its mission and each Service, as far as possible, should have full operational control over such weapons as may be needed for the accomplishment of its mission."

President Hecht adds: "The Navy League should carefully refrain from any campaign against either the Army or the Air Force. We have never indulged in any such campaign and we have no desire to do so—nor do we intend to. We do not approve of ridicule or criticism of another Service. It must be avoided. At the same time certain objective comparisons are necessary if the public is to be aware of the relative efficiency of our Services and we must at all times be able to justify our stand based on facts, constructively stated and objectively portrayed in the public's interest."

Former MacArthur Aide Reassigned—Col. LeGrande A. Diller, World War II aide de camp and from December 1941 to January 1946 public relations officer on the staff of General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, is leaving his post as Chief, Infantry Branch, Career Management Division, for duty in EUCOM.

Colonel Diller has held this assignment since 16 Feb. 1948, and has seen the Infantry doubled during his tour. His successor will be Col. Richard P. Owenshine, recently returned from duty in Korea where he commanded the 31st Infantry, 7th Infantry Division, in the Inchon landing and later served as Chief of Staff and Commanding Officer, 3d Logistical Command (B) in the Inchon and Pusan areas.

Army Officer Shortage—Unless early announcement is made of Reserve officer recall, the Army is going to face a serious officer shortage this summer and fall. Under current policies, Reserve officers are being given a four-months advance notice of call to service and after reporting for duty they are normally given three-months refresher training.

Thus, with thousands of officers recalled from non-drill pay status slated for separation in the spring and summer, it is obvious that a new recall order will have to go out soon if requirements are to be met.

Shift Security Agency Facility—The Department of Defense has announced that instead of constructing a facility at Ft. Knox, Ky., for the Armed Forces Security Agency, it has decided to construct such a facility at Ft. George G. Meade, Md.

This change in location, the Defense Department indicated, has been authorized because of a change in operational requirements, the critical housing situation at Ft. Knox, and the likelihood of a short local labor market due to industrial expansion in that general area.

U. S. Naval Academy—Capt. Charles Allen Buchanan has assumed the duties of Commandant of Midshipmen, relieving Capt. Robert B. Pirie. He and Mrs. Buchanan, and their four children, will reside at 14 Porter Road, the Commandant's Quarters.

Two silver wine coolers used aboard the Frigate Constitution during the War of 1812 have been presented to the Academy's Museum by Capt. Clarke Winters, USNR (Ret.), together with a gold stickpin and gold watch chain which were once the property of Martha Washington.

The Class of 1946 has launched an endowment Foundation which will provide funds for charitable and scientific purposes and for the education of children of Academy graduates. Fleet Admiral William F. Halsey, USN (Ret.) acted as sponsor of the Foundation on behalf of the Class. A goal of $500,000 has been set by the Foundation, to be obtained through contributions from Class members and others during the next 20 years. Funds will be used to help provide education for children of Naval Academy graduates.

Wearing of the Green—Army commanders have been informed that until about 15 May, members of the 3d Infantry Regiment in Washington, D. C., will test the new grey-green uniform. One of the major objectives of the test, said the Army, "is to present uniform to public in as favorable a light as possible and to ascertain its acceptability." Commanders were encouraged to permit wearing of this uniform during duty and off-duty hours by members of the 3d Infantry who may be performing temporary duty in their areas.

CAB Route and Mileage Manual—The Civil Aeronautics Board has contracted with the Air Traffic and Service Corporation of 1762 K Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., to publish its Official Airline Route and Mileage Manual. The Manual describes the certificated routes of the U. S. Flag Carriers and gives the restrictions and conditions under which air services are rendered. The Manual also gives the official distances between points, both consecutively and accumulatively.

A quick-search city index is included with references to the airline services available. Each route certificate and restriction is referenced to the CAB Order and its effective date. Over 100 maps show each airline's routes and service patterns. Composite maps for the U. S. certificated trunk lines, for the feeder lines (local service carriers) and for the International and Overseas lines will be included in the next revision now in the process of being printed and distributed. The Manual also contains a list of military establishments with references to the cities at which airline services are available, to the airlines which service those cities and to the text pages.

The Manual is published in looseleaf form in two parts: Part I—for domestic airline service; and Part II—for overseas service. Revisions are issued every 60 days on matching pages. Maps are revised concurrently with the text. The introduction to the Manual explains Certificate and Route Terms and is perhaps the only published source for this information.

Chamber Switches on UMT—One influential source of support for Universal Military Training, believed assured last year, was lost last week as the Chamber of Commerce of the United States switched its position from pro to con.

In August 1951, the Chamber issued a brochure titled "Where We Stand On National Defense." That document stated forcefully that "as a means for strengthening the Armed Forces, selective service should be supplemented by a program of universal military service and training." The Chamber added: "Recognizing that every individual owes his services to his country in time of need, universal military training legislation should be enacted at the earliest possible date to become effective at such time as the diminishing requirements of selective service make manpower available for such training."

Notwithstanding its August 1951 position that legislation should be speedily enacted, the Chamber now declares that it will withhold support of the pending UMT bill and will project a broader study of the military manpower problem. Noting that it has supported UMT continually since 1915, the Chamber reports the finding of a special joint committee that "changing conditions of the past few years, which have made it necessary to obtain higher degrees of skill both in the military and in defense production, now make a review of the larger manpower problem imperative."

Justifying its policy switch, the Chamber maintains that "the old arguments against UMT should be considered. One of the main ones is that it would make compulsory military training a permanent part of the American way of life."

From August 1951, when it held that UMT was essential to national defense, the Chamber has moved to a new position wherein the special committee insists that "UMT should now be considered only as a last resort."

Furthermore, the Chamber's national president, Dechard Anderson Hulcy, public utility executive of Dallas, Tex., has come out in favor of a $5 billion cut in defense spending and a $5.8 billion cut in foreign aid. Speaking on NBC's "Viewpoint, USA," President Hulcy declared "we must lop off the fat and get down to lean, hard meat in our national defense establishment."

National Guard Promotions—Analysis of statistics, made available this week in response to inquiries, show that during the calendar year preceding the coming on active duty of the eight National Guard divisions called to Service, one out of every two officers either had been appointed or promoted. The data reveals also that a considerable number of the promotions were made during the alert period—the time interval between the calling of the division and its reporting for active service.

During recent weeks, there has been considerable discussion in National Guard circles regarding current temporary promotion policies. There have been some expressions of dissatisfaction with present criteria. Here are some pertinent facts on this subject, as gathered this week.

The largest number of National Guard officers in any one of the Federalized divisions was 800, of whom 257 were appointed in the year immediately previous to recall. Additionally, 195 promotions were made during that year, 111 of them during the alert period.

In another division with 650 officers, 268 were appointed in the year prior to active service and 145 others were promoted during that time, 46 during the alert period.

In still another division, of the 650 officers, 160 were appointed within the year of Federalization, 150 others were promoted, 67 of them during the alert period.

In addition to the appointments and promotions in the year prior to active duty, the National Guard divisions have been able to grant other promotion advantages to officers in the interval since World War II. Until the Spring of 1951, for example, minimum time-in-grade qualifications could be waived for National Guard officers and a one-time promotion was authorized to fill vacancies after 12 months in grade.

Officials point out that the minimum time-in-grade requirements for promotion of National Guard officers not in active status is 4 years to colonel, 3 years to lieutenant colonel, 5 years to major and 3 years to captain, contingent, of course, upon there being vacancies. For temporary promotions in the AUS, the comparable requirements are 8 years, 9 months to colonel; 6 years, 3 months to lieutenant colonel, 5 years, 7 months to major; and 4 years, 7 months to captain. The time-in-grade for the AUS promotions shows the length of active Federal service in grade completed by officers currently carried at the top of recommended lists who will be promoted as vacancies occur.

National Guard officers who are in combat will, of course, receive battlefield advancements on the same basis as all other officers. But as regards the temporary promotion program, it must be anticipated that in view of the factors cited here that the National Guard will continue to receive relatively fewer advancements.

Some members of the National Guard contend that modifications should be made in time-in-grade and length of service qualifications to permit more promotion, would be to create inequities for Reserves and Regulars and would invalidate the careful planning which went into the formulation of current policies to insure equal promotion opportunities for all officers in active service.

Deputy Army Chaplain Delay—Speculation is increasing among Army chaplains as to the successor for Chief of Chaplains (Maj. Gen.) Roy H. Parker, who will reach the statutory age of 62 on 15 May. Meantime, no appointment of a Deputy Chief of Chaplains has been made following the retirement for statutory age of Chaplain (Brig. Gen.) James H. O'Neill. In addition to his duties as Executive Officer, Chaplain (Col.) William J. Reiss is serving as Acting Deputy.

The likelihood is that a Deputy will not be named until the new Chief of Chaplains is chosen.

Degree for Retired Officer—Lt. Col. John R. McGinness, USA-Ret., a 1925 graduate of the U. S. Military Academy, recently was awarded the MBA Degree by Western Reserve University at Cleveland, Ohio. Colonel McGinness, who was graduated in 1937 from the Command and General Staff School, resides at 3237 Fairmount Boulevard, Cleveland Heights, Ohio.

Shorten EUCOM Tours—By 1 Sept., Army tours of duty in the European Command are expected to be reduced to a normal 36 months. By 1 May, the rotation program will have cut the time to 38 months.

Lisbon NATO Meeting

that the atrocious rioting in Cairo which finished the old Government will prove to have been a good thing, despite the loss of life and property. Disorder and shooting and burning offer no encouragement to tourists, and Egypt has a profound liking for tourist dollars and for the investment dollars which often follow in their train. The Cairo riots went much further than designed, and provided Egypt itself with a shock. The new Government proved itself able to half the disorder swiftly; we may find it able fairly soon to consider treaties, too. So far as the Lisbon meetings are concerned, however, it would be unwise to expect anything like a Mediterranean Command of NATO, comparable to SECEUR and the new SACLAN. It involves issues larger than Suez, and a unified Allied establishment throughout the Mediterranean is not yet visible in the crystal ball.

The White House provided comfort for large sections of NATO during the week, with announcement to Congress that $478,000,000 of military aid funds have been diverted to provide economic help of which several nations were in more acute need. The relationship between the two forms is intimate, for in a great many cases economic aid will steady an uneasy industry and (in the President's words) "contribute more to military strength in Europe than if the same funds were used to procure military end-items." The transfer was achieved under terms of last year's Congressional grant; the grant provided $4.8 billions of military aid and $1 billion plus in economic aid to European nations, but it also permitted transfer of 10 per cent of the former to the latter fund. Of the $478 millions so granted, $300 millions goes to Britain, $100 millions to France, $10 millions to Greece, $25 millions to Turkey, and $43 millions to Yugoslavia, which is more European than Turkey but less NATOish. France thus receives a total of $600 millions in aid for the year, a part of it for helping Indo-China directly. The delegates from France, accordingly, can go to Lisbon breathing more freely than they could at the Rome conference in December.

FEC Reports Dependent Travel Delay Details

The Far East Command reports that most dependents on March travel lists will sail from the United States after 1 April.

Officials added that in view of the backlog occasioned by lack of anticipated shipping, only very small April priority lists will be compiled. Furthermore, the arrival of families in Japan during April will fill nearly all vacant housing.

After that, the size of lists will be governed in large part by the rate that houses are vacated due to families rotating to the U. S.

The FEC statement said that special efforts are being made to make more shipping spaces available to dependents.

Okinawa More Optimistic

On Okinawa, it is anticipated that the waiting period for travel of dependents will be cut in April from eight to six months. Approximately 70 Army and Air Force dependent families were slated to arrive early this month, representing the remainder of the December and all of the January group.

Meantime, work is continuing on 620 houses for dependents to supplement 500 other houses completed or nearing completion.

EUCOM Dependent Ruling

European Command Headquarters has directed Army commanders to insure that military personnel with alien dependents obtain immigration visas for them in time to permit rotation to the U. S. on completion of the normal overseas tour. EUCOM officials stated that requests have been made by personnel to have their overseas duty tour here extended because their alien dependents were not documented for travel to the U. S.

Since personnel with dependents are reported to the Department of the Army for assignment instructions several months before completing their tour of duty, lack of a dependent's visa does not warrant requesting a change in assignment instructions to permit extension of the overseas tour.

War in Korea

and damaged two others. They also destroyed troop bunkers, field pieces and supply revetments southwest of Ando-ri.

Night attacks were made by American B-26 light bombers and Marine aircraft on enemy highway traffic, destroying numerous Red vehicles. They also hit railway lines, knocking out locomotives and rail cars.

Two enemy MIG-15 jet airplanes were damaged in a brief encounter between 17 American Sabre jets and approximately 45 enemy aircraft. The running air engagement took place between Sinanju and the Yalu River at an altitude of 40,000 feet. Another air fight resulted from an enemy attack on a flight of American F-86's, flying cover for a fighter-bomber strike on a rail line. In a fast 3-minute battle two more Red MIGs were damaged.

In a summary issued this week, the Far East Air Force announced that its planes, including attached Marine, South African, Australian, and South Korean aircraft, flew more than 23,000 sorties over Korea during the month of January. They inflicted 1,230 casualties on the enemy during the month, and destroyed or damaged 2,490 Red vehicles, 39 locomotives, 835 rail cars, 15 tunnels, 90 bridges, 1,925 buildings, and 21 tanks. In addition they cut enemy rail lines in 2,435 places.

During the month, 31 enemy MIG-15 jet planes were destroyed, 2 probably destroyed, and 30 damaged. This brings the MIG losses since the start of the war to 220 destroyed, 55 probably destroyed, and 338 damaged. Enemy losses of all types of planes since the start of the war to 1 Feb. 1952, both in air combat and on the ground, total 355 destroyed, 102 probably destroyed, and 393 damaged.

Heavy and accurate enemy anti-aircraft fire made the Far East Air Force plane losses to ground fire during January the largest of any month of the war. Forty-four Allied planes were shot down, mostly by Communist flak, while engaged in low-level bomb runs and strafing sweeps. Allied planes lost during the month to Red ground fire included 23 jets and 21 propeller-driven aircraft. Some of the pilots were rescued.

Five American F-86 Sabre Jets were lost in air combat during January. Included in the Allied planes lost to enemy ground fire were 12 F-51 Mustangs, 10 F-84 Thunder Jets, 8 F-80 Shooting Stars, 1 T-6, 3 B-26 light bombers, 4 F4U Marine planes, 1 F9F, 1 AD-2, 2 MK-8s, 1 RF-80, and 1 RF-51. In addition 2 B-29 Superforts and 1 F-86 Sabre Jet were lost due to other causes.

Far East Air Force plane losses in action during the Korean War total 479. These include 142 American jets lost to ground fire, and 38 in air combat, 239 propeller-driven planes to ground fire, and 15 in air combat, and also 13 friendly foreign planes and 3 shore-based Marine planes lost in action, either to ground fire or in air combat.

The Department of Defense has announced that from the beginning of the war through 25 Jan. 1952 the enemy has sustained 1,601,350 casualties, including 37,876 interned Korean civilians. This total represents an increase of 32,281 since the last previous report as of 3 Jan. 1952.

Of the total enemy casualties 735,678 were sustained by the North Korean Reds, and 827,796 by the Chinese Communists. It is estimated that the North Koreans lost 462,939 in killed and wounded, 161,248 in sick and injured, and 111,491 are prisoners of war, exclusive of interned civilians. The Chinese are estimated to have lost 673,812 in battle casualties, and 123,265 in non-battle casualties, while 20,729 are held as prisoners of war by the Allies.

The United Nations announced in Paris this week that Allied battle losses in Korea from the beginning of the war through 31 Dec. 1951 totaled 306,070. This figure included 47,138 killed in action, 183,273 wounded, and 76,659 missing or captured. This total is more than 100,000 less than the aggregate of 414,945 compiled by the Associated Press. The discrepancy is principally in South Korean losses which were estimated at 301,864 by the Associated Press, after consultation with the South Korean government, and at 192,960 by the United Nations. The lower figure was based on reports from the Allied high command in the Far East. The difference may have been due to the exclusion of civilian casualties from the United Nations total.

The latest compilation of American battle losses in Korea by the Defense Department, covering notifications to next of kin from the beginning of the war through 1 Feb. 1952, shows total casualties of 105,271, an increase of 270 since last week's report. The total covers 18,245 killed in action, including 1,719 who died of wounds; 76,324 wounded in action, including those who subsequently died; and 12,614 missing in action, including 193 known to have died, 1,390 who returned to military control, and 175 known to have been captured, leaving 10,856 currently missing.

Of the total American battle losses 86,315 were sustained by the Army, 1,208 by the Navy, 16,738 by the Marine Corps, and 1,012 by the Air Force.

4. Group suitable job titles and Military Occupational Specialties within larger patterns to achieve the utmost efficiency in training, schooling, usability, requisitioning and replacement.

5. Develop a common numbering system which is simple, easy to use, capable of expansion and best to meet the requirements of the T/O&E and T/D training (replacement and unit), schooling classification, requisitioning and replacement.

6. Integrate the MOS structure into the T/O&E and T/D to best utilize the capabilities of electrical machine accounting equipment in determining not only the grade and branch structure, but the MOS requirements in leaders and nonleaders (specialists) by using branch, career fields, and MOS of Troop List, The Army Troop Program or Mobilization Plan.

ways strongly emphasized in an election year Congress, there is belief that Secretary Lovett's notable presentation of the factors behind the military budget preparation and the testimony of Service officials to follow will convince Senators and Representatives of the necessity for voting the requested funds.

Military Electronics Training

Hugh P. McTeigue, manager of training for the RCA Service Company at Camden, N. J., for the past three and a half years, has been appointed to direct the company's accelerated military electronics training program. It is announced by P. B. Reed, vice president in charge of the company's Government Service Division.

Mr. Reed pointed out that a primary mission of the company's Government Service Division is to assist the Armed Forces in training military personnel to install, operate, and maintain electronic equipment. "On each assignment," he said, "we strive to increase the qualified manpower reserves of the military organization we are serving, and to shorten the time until its own men will be able to handle maintenance requirements on their own. In other words, our objective is to work ourselves out of one job—and turn to another."

Mr. McTeigue will work directly with more than 600 field engineers serving as civilian aides with the Armed Forces at strategic points around the world to insure maximum training effectiveness. He will assist them in the development of training techniques, advise them on training aids, and help them organize courses of instruction. He will also plan factory training courses for military personnel, and will be available to assist and advise representatives of the Armed Forces directly, on request.

Army Engineers I. G.

Col. Howard V. Canan has been assigned to a newly created post as Engineer Inspector General in the Office of the Army Chief of Engineers. He recently completed an assignment of more than two years as Engineer for the Second Army, Ft. George Meade, Md.

Colonel Canan's assignment follows the recent announcement by Secretary of the Army Frank Pace, jr., that Inspector General's offices will be established within each of the Technical Services as part of an improved system for inspecting Army procurement and property-accounting activities.

Colonel Canan lives at 621 Hunting Towers, East, Alexandria, Va.

Tie-Down Ring

A simple tie-down ring, developed by Ellis R. Grover, jr., chief commissaryman, USN, has been adopted by the Navy Bureau of Ships to make stowage aboard ship more flexible.

The device consists of a small iron ring attached to a T-shaped base. The base is hooked under the iron gratings which floor stowage spaces in many vessels. Tie-down lines are then secured to the iron ring. Chief Grover's idea facilitates shifting of cargo and makes possible placement in any desired position within stowage spaces, the Navy bureau said.

Grover is on duty in the USS General W. A. Mann, a cargo ship of the Military Sea Transportation Service in the Pacific.

"Stretch-Out" On Jets

The "stretch-out" of the military build-up about which Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett testified this week (details on first page) was evidenced in the report from Burbank, Calif., that an industry-wide rescheduling plan has reduced future per-day production goals at Lockheed plants in California and Georgia.

No Lockheed contract has been reduced; however, the total output will be extended over longer periods.

Actually, jet aircraft backlogs have been increased by new Air Force orders, and simultaneously Lockheed said that new quantities of B-47 stratojet bombers have been ordered for production at the company's Marietta, Ga., plant.

The effect of the "stretch-out" will mean, insofar as production of T-33 jet trainers is concerned, that production which has been on a rise toward a high peak ahead now will be reshaped into a "plateau" of production ranging over more months than original schedules specified. The same situation will prevail in other Lockheed military production.

Navy Honors Robt. F. Nelson

Mr. Robert F. Nelson, executive vice president of American Type Founders, was decorated with the Navy's Distinguished Public Service Award by Secretary Dan A. Kimball in a Pentagon ceremony on 29 Jan.

The citation, read by Secretary Kimball's aide, Capt. David Young, gave Mr. Nelson credit for "unprecedented records" during World War II in the development and manufacture of "a vast line of gun fire controls, torpedo controls, navigation and other instruments for the Navy." Mr. Nelson at the time was vice president in charge of production, personnel and operations of Arma Corporation, Brooklyn, N. Y.

American Type Founders manufactures the new 76-mm. guns which arms the General Walker Bulldog Tank, as well as several important fire control instruments for the Navy.

Navy Jet Engine Plant

Construction of a $50,000,000 jet aircraft engine assembly and test plant at Romulus, Mich., to be built for the Navy under the supervision of the Ford Motor Company, will get underway next month. Slated to be a Naval Industrial Reserve plant, it is scheduled for completion in the spring of 1953.

The Romulus plant is to be used in connection with part of a Lincoln-Mercury assembly plant now being built at Wayne, Mich., for J-40 jet engine fabrication and sub-assembly.

Blood Collections

Blood collections for the twentieth week of the Armed Forces Blood Donor Program totalled 74,226 pints of whole blood, the American Red Cross and the Department of Defense announced.

Convair's Annual Report

Consolidated Vultee Aircraft Corporation's profit for the fiscal year ended 30 Nov. 1951, was $11,550,524 before federal taxes on income, Floyd B. Odium, Convair board chairman, reported to stockholders on 4 Feb.

After federal taxes the net profit amounted to $7,750,524, or approximately $3.27 per share, he said. Net profit reported for the previous fiscal year, both before and after federal taxes, was $10,241,644. Income loss carry-forwards, not fully used in prior years, were exhausted in 1951. Without the benefit of these carry-forwards income after all charges and taxes would have been roughly $4,900,000 for 1951. However, present indications for the 1952 year now current give promise of earnings and profits after all charges, including taxes, as great as the income of $7,750,524 reported for 1951.

The company's net sales for 1951 approximated $322,000,000 compared with $256,000,000 in 1950. As of 30 Nov. 1951, Convair's backlog of signed contracts, letters of intent, and contracts in final stages of negotiation amounted to approximately $900,000,000.

In making his report to Convair stockholders Mr. Odium gave special attention to the "devastating effect of rising taxes on America's system of free enterprise."

"While our people are properly preparing to defend themselves against the armed aggression of our Communist enemies," Odium stated, "we should not lose sight of just as destructive processes at home which have their long term effect on our economic and social structure."

Citing Convair as a typical victim of the present tax system, Odium stated that additional work in 1952 would bring substantially more gross earnings to the company, but that the net income available for dividends would not increase proportionately.

Most of Convair's business is done for the Armed Services on a cost-plus-fixed-fee basis. That fee approximates 4% after all disallowances and other applicable adjustments are taken into account. "If 82% of this fee on increased work is taken by the federal government in the form of income and excess profits taxes," Odium pointed out, "it follows that after such taxes only 18% of 4%, or approximately three-fourths of 1%, remains for stockholders as a fee on this increased portion or bracket of work done."

Mr. Odium stated that a tax law that leaves so little by way of increased net earnings for the efforts of management in more than doubling in the future the company's present volume of production penalizes efficiency and enterprise too much and gets very close to a profitless economy.

Col. Stoner Decorated

Col. Edmund C. Stoner, who was in a large measure responsible for developing the allied air force communications system in Italy during World War II, was decorated recently with the Order of the British Empire by the British Consul General Henry A. Hobson in New York.

Colonel Stoner is now Assistant to the Vice President in charge of Sales of the Federal Telephone and Radio Corporation, manufacturing subsidiary of the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation. He joined the Naval Reserve in 1924 and attended the Naval Flying School in Fort Hamilton. He was transferred to the Army Air Corps in 1927 and was commissioned as Second Lieutenant in the Air Corps Reserve. He was called to active duty on 1 April, 1942 and received his commission as Colonel early in 1945 and returned to civilian life at the end of 1945, at which time he rejoined the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation.

U. S. COAST GUARD

THE Coast Guard has announced the extension of security regulations for the signing of merchant marine crews for U. S. merchant vessels which are essential in the national defense. The extension covers vessels of 100 gross tons or more which are engaged in trade with Canada, the West Indies and Mexico, or in the coastwise trade.

After 15 Feb. all crew members of such vessels must have documents bearing the endorsement "Validated for Emergency Service."

The same security requirements have been in force for several months for various other categories of vessels. The regulations now will cover all merchant vessels of 100 gross tons or more which are engaged in foreign or intercoastal trade, or trade with Canada, the West Indies and Mexico, and coastwise including Alaska and Hawaii and on the Great Lakes.

MICROWAVE

In 1931, International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation became the world pioneer—the first to beam man's voice through space by microwave. Today microwave has become the fastest growing communications system for spanning mountains, swamps, rivers and other natural barriers without costly wire lines—a system that is virtually immune to storm damage. And today IT&T is still the recognized leader, with its greatly advanced “pulse time multiplex” method of microwave transmission. If your company is planning to set up, expand or replace its own cross-country communication system, look first to PTM microwave. This versatile, flexible, new method provides for multiple speech channels, unattended telegraph, telemetering, remote control and other signaling. PTM microwave is available through Federal Telephone and Radio Corporation, an IT&T manufacturing associate.
